Phil,

Here is a slightly longer version with citations:

"The methods used by the 2005 BBAP to classify state land and establish guidelines and statements of intent include:

using primarily marine criteria, such as whether land is a walrus haulout, to determine whether inland uplands, such as those at Pebble, qualify for classification as fish and wildlife habitat (see 2005 BBAP, p. 2-9; a link to the 2005 BBAP is in the Appendix); omission of salmon in non-navigable waters from the process of designating and classifying land as habitat (see 2005 BBAP, pp. 3-323 – 3-330); omission of moose and caribou from that process (see 2005 BBAP, p. 2-9); lack of a land use classification category for subsistence hunting and fishing, while ADNR has a public recreation land category that includes sport hunting and fishing (see ADNR's land planning regulations at 11 AAC 55.050 – .230); and then defining recreation as excluding sport hunting and fishing for purposes of preparing the 2005 BBAP (see 2005 BBAP, p. A-11)."
